Senator Dick Durbin (right) visits the Aurora offices of Clarity Communications Monday for a demonstration of the company's cell phone technology by vice president Bill Jenkins (left) and president Jim Fuentes (center). Clarity, a wireless telecommunications company with 70 employees, has begun selling a variety of advanced cell phone services such as "push-to-talk" connections to small phone companies. Durbin was interested in learning more about the technological potential for a universal or interoperable network of wireless communications among Illinois emergency services.
